

100th Year – Remembrance Day

Self Reflection – My Thoughts

- When I hear the word “Remembrance”, not only do I think of the people who fought during the wars, but also the people who have stood up for any sort of change in the world over the course of history. There are so many more individuals that have changed our world centuries ago that we most likely have no clue about because of how long ago it has been, and I like to think about and appreciate this thought.
- Remembrance day is always a special day for me because my grandfather fought in World War 1. He was an air force pilot and earned 3 medals. We also have his helmet, jacket, and book he used to record certain things. I am grateful to have this stuff, therefore remembrance day is special for me. I do not know much about my grandfather, and do not know the full extent of his services.
- The world would feel different if we did not take a day to acknowledge what people have done for us during the war. If not for them choosing to fight for freedom, we would not be where we are today, and we look up to that fact and still decide to set up a day for it 100 years later.

Robert Mons Guy

- Robert entered the army December 1939 and trained in the 1st City of London Regiment, the Royal Fusiliers.
- There was a request for Commandos to go to Norway as it was being taken over by the German Army very quickly, and he accepted.
- He joined the other Commandos in Trondheim, which is just north of Bergen.
- Later volunteered for the Parachuting Regiment for the rest of the war and was discharged in 1946.

How I showed my recognition

- For 2021's remembrance day I ended up taking a walk with my family for an hour in honour of remembrance day. It was a peaceful walk which I would definitely do again. I would not have been able to do that if not for every soldier that fought during the wars, and I am very grateful for their service.

Song: Soldiers Cry by Ronald Majeau

I chose this song as it fits the mood of a power point such as this. It's calm, respectful, and simple. It's a wonderful song.
